The distribution system—how it really works

The distribution system is the method (or way) that the detailer knows where the jobs (bils) are and where the Sailors are that will fill them. The detailer's job is to match the Sailor to the billet in accordance with the needs of the Navy and, hopefully, with the Sailor's desires. The billet or job list is the requisition (REQ). It's a computer-generated list that comes from the Enlisted Personnel Management Center (EPMAC) in New Orleans. It is based on:

- Billets Authorized (BA), which is basically the number of positions on a ship or shore facility that the Navy has bought.

- Navy Manning Plan (NMP) which is the "fair share" manning for all commands. We call it fair share because we may have more billets than people, or vice versa, and we try to give every command a fair share of the available people.

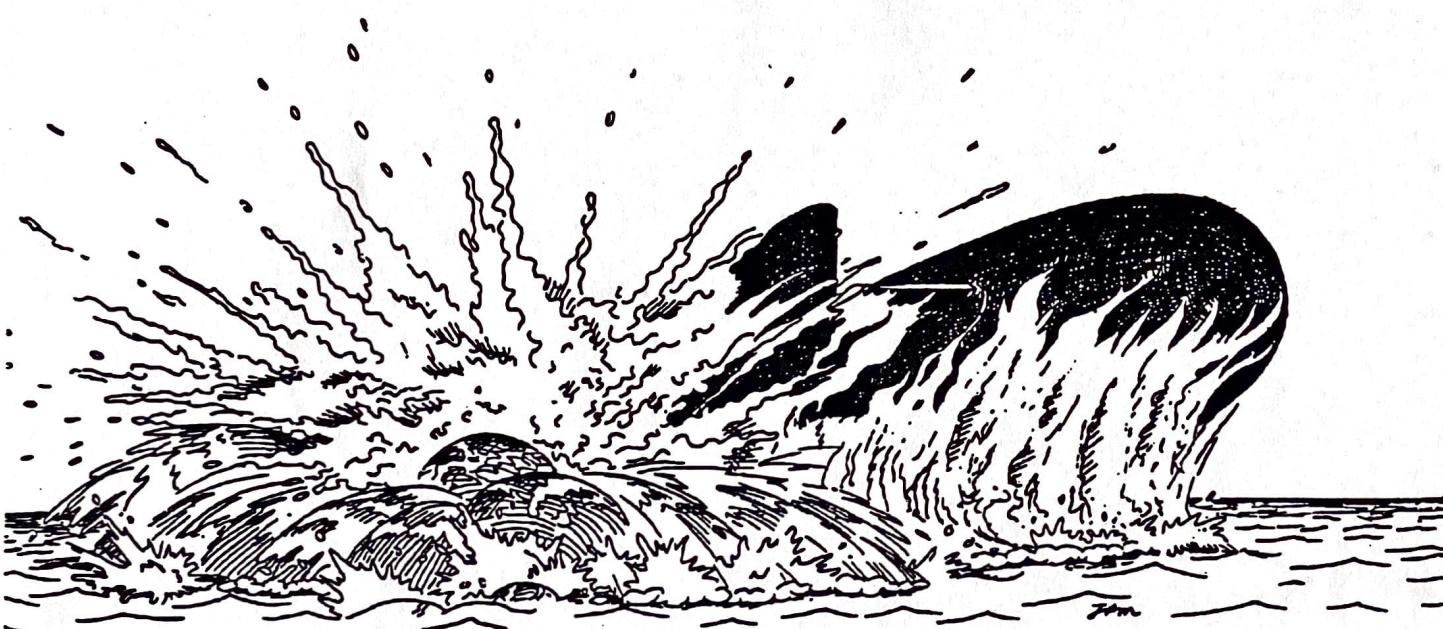

- PRD/EAOS of the individuals assigned to the activity. These factors and others are combined to generate a requisition and will indicate the available billets for the next nine months. The requisition comes out twice a month and the dates are on the back of Link.

A large part of the detailer's job is making sure that the Sailor is going to fill a valid billet and that he/she is qualified. You may wonder where EPMAC fits into this picture. EPMAC is your placement coordinator. They act as the placement agent for the Manning Control Authority (CINCLANTFLT/CINCPACFLT) and work closely with the Type Commanders (SUBLANT/SUBPAC) to monitor the manning of our ships to ensure they are ready for deployment, overhauls, etc. Basically, they work directly with the Detailer to put people where they are needed most. When emergent requirements exist, EPMAC will work with the Type Commander and BUPERS to identify a fix. This can either be by identifying an excess in the same homeport or directing an order modification for an area prospective gain.

What does this mean to you? Your Detailer can only assign you to where valid billets exist and to those billets where you meet the qualification requirements. When contacting your detailer, knowledge of the above information and having more than one choice for your next duty station will improve the process.
